1. Describe the difference between journalists, who emphasize campaign events as the main causes of presidential election outcomes, and political scientists, who focus on what Noel calls the “fundamentals.”

2. When asked their party preferences, roughly 1/3 of Americans declare themselves to be “independents.” Are that many people really independents? What have political scientists discovered about how independents vote?